JPMMA works with Delivering Good on Harvey relief efforts

Organizations work to collect items for victims of disaster

Thomas Russell, August 30, 2017

HOUSTON — The Juvenile Product Manufacturers Association is working with Delivering Good to coordinate product donations for victims of Hurricane Harvey in need of items ranging from clothing to sheets and blankets.

The JPMMA has enlisted its members that Delivering Good — formerly known as C.S.I. Kids — is working with the fashion, home and children’s industries to get donations of new merchandise for families affected by the disaster. In addition to product donations, the organization is accepting cash donations, which will help those affected by the disaster.

The organization has already received portable cribs from Delta Children as well as donations from Jала Marketing Group. Other items it is collecting include:

- Apparel for men, women and children
- Undies and socks for men, women and children
- Towels, sheets, blankets, comforters and pillows
- Toothbrushes, toothpaste and personal care items

Donations can be taken through links at Delivering Good’s website.

"We believe there will be a large number of people displaced from the storm damage and the flooding that is expected to continue through this week," said Delivering Good Chairman Alan Clinger. "We are asking the industry to provide us with new products, as they have in so many disasters we have responded to in the past. Consumers can help us by donating to help defray the costs of getting the donations to the affected areas.

Those wishing to stay informed of the relief efforts can visit Delivering Good’s disaster link above or follow Delivering Good on Twitter @DeliveringGood or on Facebook or LinkedIn. The organization said that any donations of product or cash that can’t be used for Hurricane Harvey relief will be used for ongoing poverty needs.

Additional information about the effort can be seen at JPMMA’s website, which is helping to spread the word among juvenile product industry members.
