

Jennifer Tani (she/her) joined Healthy Schools Campaign (HSC) as president + CEO in September 2023, building on two decades of work promoting access to education and leadership development, strengthening the health and human services sector, and advancing equity through programming, philanthropy, and advocacy.

Healthy Schools Campaign works to make schools healthier places for children to learn and thrive by advocating for national and local policies and practices that support health and learning, including nutritious school food, physical activity, comprehensive mental and physical health services, green schoolyards and clean air at school. By focusing on issues affecting students of color and those from under-invested communities, HSC strives to make equity part of the public dialogue about education and health.

Prior to joining HSC, Jennifer led the Chicago site of The Posse Foundation, one of the most comprehensive and renowned college success, diversity, and leadership development programs in the U.S.

Jennifer's civic engagement includes service on the board of Consolidated Community School District 21 and leadership roles with the Asian Giving Circle, Illinois Caucus for Adolescent Health, Japanese American Service Committee, and Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders in Philanthropy.

She received her bachelor's degree in Sociology and Anthropology from Carleton College, and a master's degree in Public Service Management from DePaul University. Jennifer is a member of the Cultivate: Women of Color Leadership program.
